About the project

In the fall of 2023, the National Association of Large Families launched its Erasmus+ higher education project, "Supporting inclusive learning environments: higher education strategies for supporting students with families and children" (project ID: 2023-1-HU01-KA220-HED-000156058), in partnership with Károli Gáspár Reformed University and Sapientia Hungarian University of Transylvania. in partnership with Károli Gáspár Reformed University, Sapientia Hungarian University of Transylvania, Selye János University in Komárom, and II. Rákóczi Ferenc Carpathian Hungarian College (now a university), as well as HÖÖK Közhasznú Nonprofit Kft., which joined the project later.

The main goal of the project, which will be completed on February 28, 2026, is to reduce the barriers affecting students with children in higher education institutions. The project, implemented within the framework of the partnership, creates an inclusive approach for universities that enables the integration of the aforementioned target group into higher education activities.

Within the framework of the project, the partnership considers the development of family-friendly higher education systems to be its top priority, with a particular focus on increasing the access, participation, and completion rates of disadvantaged students. Using the results of the project, the partnership aims to implement inclusive, family-friendly curricula and practices in the higher education institutions involved in the project.

Between March 2024 and September 2025, comprehensive focus group research was carried out within the institutional frameworks of the partner organizations. Two research documents identified the challenges families face in university life and the skills teachers need to respond to these challenges.

Based on the research results and testing by partner institutions, a toolkit document was compiled that provides guidance and methodological tools for teachers to support students with families in higher education institutions. The document focuses on specific skills needed to create an inclusive learning environment, such as communication, empathy and compassion, flexibility and adaptability, and technological and collaborative skills.

Through the cooperation of higher education institutions participating as partner organizations and external stakeholders, we monitor and evaluate the progress and effectiveness of the outlined and planned reforms using document packages containing monitoring and evaluation templates.

Budapest, December 10, 2025.
